

Domain constraints specify that the value of each attribute A must be an atomic value from the domain $\text{dom}(A)$.

The data types associated with domains typically include standard numeric data types for integers, and real numbers. Characters, fixed length strings, and variable length strings are also available.

Other possible domains may be described by a subrange of values from a data type or as an enumerated data type where all possible values are explicitly listed.